I believe that experience, qualifications and intelligence play the most important role in getting a job, as these factors show what a candidate is capable of. These days, employers look most at work experience and only after they check candidates for interviews.

In my opinion, hobbies, astrological sign and marital status are not important factors. These factors do not affect the candidates' performance in any way.

Another factor for getting a job is motivation, in my opinion, if a candidate is motivated to improve the company's activities and himself, then two sides win in this case.

My current job is related to the service sector. When I came to get a job, I was asked about my personal qualities, the desired level of income. After that, training began on courses and modules that ended with a check of the learned material and a demonstration in practice. Our bosses are professionals in their field and just good people, they will always help in any way they can. We have a large team, but due to the high turnover of personnel, 4-6 new colleagues may appear every month. But the people who have been working for a long time in the company have become a big family for me.

I was also looking for a job by profession and had interviews where they asked technical questions, they were only interested in work experience, skills and competence in work-related issues. Unfortunately, these interviews were not successful.

I think I'm adaptable, as it's easy for me to find new acquaintances and I quickly get used to changes.

At my job, I have established myself as a reliable person who you can rely on when we have inspections, I am always asked to work on this day.

I am motivated because I want to improve my professional qualities and also improve the activities of my company.
